Former coastline

Along Marine Parade Road, before Nallur Road, is a well-preserved seawall that traces the original coastal embankment. Its posts and balustrades show influences from colonial architecture, while its iron gates feature seaside-themed motifs.

Seafront homes and holiday lifestyle

One of the few remaining structures of the once-lively beachside dining scene is the Hua Yu Wee seafood restaurant. It is housed in a 1920s bungalow with detached double-storey wings, outhouses and steps leading to the former beachfront.

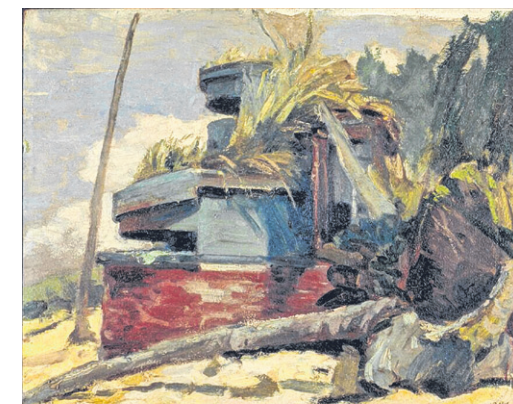

Highlands of Bedok

Prior to land reclamation, these undulating hills were once cultivated as fruit and vegetable farms. Excavated earth from the hills was used to fill the sea, to form today's East Coast Park and Marine Parade.

Kampong Bedok

In the 20th century, the rubber tree plantation that was previously Kampong Bedok Darat became a vibrant centre of Malay life. Street names reflected community uses for the streets. For example, the "Greja" in Jalan Greja comes from the Malay word for "church".
