

New-look Cabinet

Key Cabinet appointments in the government of new British Prime Minister Theresa May

— Anti-Brexit

— Pro-Brexit

PHILIP HAMMOND

Chancellor of the Exchequer

- Mr Hammond, the former foreign secretary, replaces Mr George Osborne, who was dropped by Mrs May.
- Educated in a state school in Essex, Mr Hammond, 60, studied at Oxford. He held multiple jobs before entering politics, including as director of a healthcare and nursing company and acting as a consultant for the government of Malawi. He built a multimillion-pound fortune, according to Britain's Telegraph newspaper. He has been an MP since 1997.

BORIS JOHNSON

Foreign Secretary

- Mr Johnson, 52, is a former mayor of London and a leading figure in the campaign for Britain to leave the EU.
- Educated at Eton and Oxford, he once worked as a reporter in Brussels for the Daily Telegraph newspaper and for The Times of London. He was allegedly fired from The Times for deception.
- Noted for his unkempt hair and taste for showmanship, he has angered foreign governments for his undiplomatic comments, including insulting Turkey's president in a poem. Mr Johnson is half-Turkish.

DAVID DAVIS

Brexit Secretary

- Mr Davis, 67, is a eurosceptic. According to The Telegraph, he went to university at Warwick where he studied computer science. He later studied at the London Business School and at Harvard. He served as a Minister of State for Europe and Conservative Party chairman, and was Shadow Home Secretary from 2003 to 2008. Once seen as a future leader, he lost out to Mr David Cameron in the race for the top job in 2005.

AMBER RUDD

Home Secretary

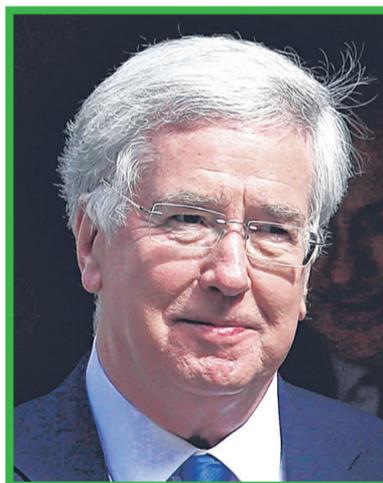

- Mrs Rudd, 52, is a relative newcomer to politics. She was elected MP for Hastings and Rye in 2010 and was Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change from 2015 in Mr Cameron's government.
- Before entering politics, she worked as a financial journalist, venture capitalist and recruitment agent. She also worked in New York and London for JP Morgan & Co. She was educated at Cheltenham Ladies' College and studied history at Edinburgh University.
- She was an extra for the 1994 British hit movie Four Weddings And A Funeral, starring Hugh Grant.

LIAM FOX

Secretary of State for International Trade

- Mr Fox, 54, voted to leave the EU.
- An MP since 1992, he has been a controversial figure over his professional and personal life. From 2010 to 2011, he was Defence Secretary and was dropped from the Cabinet amid controversy about a close friend who he took on as an unofficial and undeclared adviser, according to media reports. Mr Fox studied medicine at the University of Glasgow Medical School and is a former general practitioner and civilian army medical officer.

MICHAEL FALLON

Defence Secretary

- Mr Fallon, 64, retains his role as Defence Secretary held in the Cameron administration.
- A veteran MP, he was educated at Epsom College and then the University of St Andrews, according to The Telegraph. Mr Fallon, from Perth in Scotland, was a director of a fitness firm before entering Parliament, and holds directorships of other businesses including nursing homes and nurseries.
