Contamination

Fipronil

NH₂ F3C

veterinary products to kill fleas, lice, ticks and mites

Pesticide used in

 Banned for use on animals farmed for food

June 19

Fipronil first found in eggs at a Belgian company

How did pesticide get into eggs?

 Dutch regulator NVWA believes the pesticide was used illegally to battle red mites that infest chickens

July 20 Belgium notifies European Commission about the contamination

How bad is it?

Can cause:

- Eye and skin irritation; nausea; vomiting; damage to liver, kidney and thyroid
- In large quantities, the insecticide is considered "moderately hazardous",
- Britain said the risk to the public is very low Action taken:

according to the WHO

 Millions of eggs destroyed; millions of chickens face culling

Affected countries

Belgium, Netherlands, Germany Sweden, Switzerland, Britain, France

Sources: NVWA.NL, GERMAN FEDERAL INSTITUTE FOR RISK ASSESSMENT, THEGROCER.CO.UK, GERMAN MEDIA STRAITS TIMES GRAPHICS ADAPTED FROM AFP