In the event of a terror attack...

was by a foreign Buddhist group

Hindus

Respondents who are likely to be suspicious towards those of a particular religion, after an attack by terrorists claiming to be of that religion

Muslims

Buddhists

Christians

Hindus

40%

Respondents who would let others know that they do not associate people of that particular religion with terror attacks

Respondents who would let others know that they do not associate people of that particular religion with terror attacks

Non-Muslims, when the attack was by a foreign Muslim group
Non-Buddhists, when the attack

34%

Non-Christians, when the attack was by a foreign Christian group
Non-Hindus, when the attack was by a foreign Hindu group

32%
30%

Respondents who would join a campaign or event that recognises that people of that particular religion are not the cause of the attack

Non-Muslims, when the attack was by a foreign Muslim group
Non-Buddhists, when the attack was by a foreign Buddhist group

33%

Non-Buddhists, when the attack was by a foreign Buddhist group
Non-Christians, when the attack was by a foreign Christian group

33%
30%

Non-Hindus, when the attack was by a foreign Hindu group

Respondents from various religions who are quite or very likely to speak to people of other religions to clarify that the terrorist does not represent their own community

 Buddhists
 34%

 Christians
 43%

 Muslims
 50%

 Hindus
 42%

 No religion
 40%

Respondents from various religions who are quite or very likely to help people of other religions who have been affected by the terror attack carried out by a terrorist from the same religion as theirs people of other religions who have been affected by the terror attack carried out by a terrorist from the same religion as theirs

Buddhists
Christians
Muslims
75%

No religion 64%

Source: INSTITUTE OF POLICY STUDIES REPORT STRAITS TIMES GRAPHICS

76%