

Stopped in their tracks?

A bald space has emerged along the green plots in the west, breaking a vegetated link that could allow animals to move safely from their forest homes in the west to the central nature reserves. A vegetated plot across from the forest corridor running through Tengah new town has been razed for a Housing Board project, but the authorities say they are building other animal highways: via park connectors, roadside planting and landscaped stretches.

