

Covid-19 fatigue and social bubbles

As the coronavirus pandemic drags on and countries around the world are hit with new waves of infection, the outbreak and measures put in place to curb it look set to stay for quite a while. Timothy Goh looks at how those here are coping with the new normal.

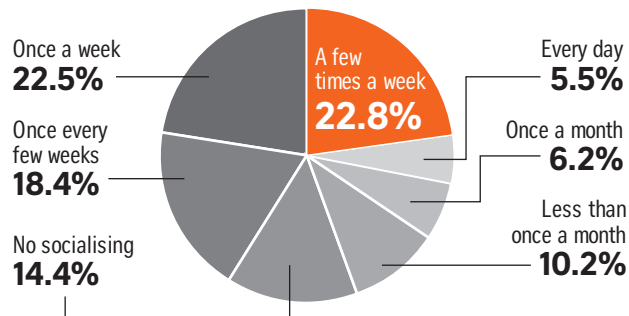

Has the Covid-19 outbreak lasted longer or about as long as you anticipated?

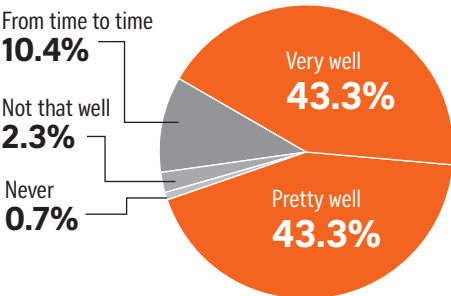

How do you feel about the current Covid-19 outbreak response measures in Singapore?

How often have you socialised with people outside your household since the start of phase two (June 19)?

Going forward, how likely are you to continue to strictly adhere to social distancing rules, even when the authorities aren't around?

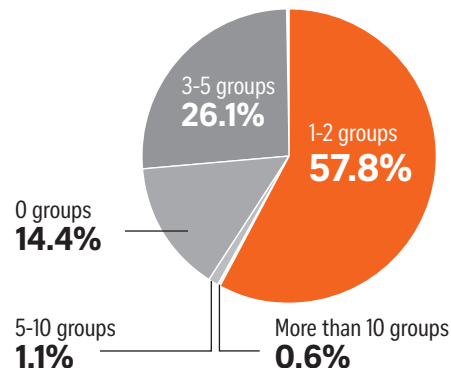

When out in public, do you always wear your mask properly even if an authority isn't around?

(i.e. covering both your mouth and nose securely)

On average, how many different social groups outside your immediate household have you socialised with each week since the start of phase two (June 19)?

As long as two groups do not consist of exactly the same members, they are considered separate groups.

Notes: The online poll, which was commissioned by The Sunday Times, was conducted by Milieu Insight, an online market research firm. Field work was conducted in the week beginning on Aug 3, 2020, and results are representative of the Singapore resident population aged 16 and above. The margin of error is +/- 3% with a 95% confidence level. (Sample size: 1,000)
